MAN TRAPPED BY EXPLOSION; SAVES HIMSELF

Torch Bursts in Colorado Building Furnace and. Flames Spread.

Trapped in the fire-box of the big furnace in the Colorado building, James Callan, who was employed in preparing the machinery for winter use, had narrow escape from death this morning when a gasolene torch exploded a few feet in front of the opening.

Callan was in the rear of the great fron box when a deafening crash occurred, followed by great volumes of dense black smoke which poured into the furnace, partially blinding the man. Reaches Coal Bin.

nearly suffocated, Callan fought his way through the flames to a coal bin under the Pourteenth street side of the building which had been recently filled.

Scrambling frantically to the top of the coal pile, he managed to force open the trap door of the manhole through which the coal is shot into the cellar. Even after this was accomplished Callan found himself almost too weak to crawl out to the sidewalk, where he sank exhausted. He was more badly frightened, lowever, than hurt.

Fire Alarm Turned In.

In the meantime not knowing of the struggle which Callan was having Jani-tor Smith ran to Box 181, at the corner of Fourteenth and G streets, and turned in the fire-alarm, while John Jessop, chief engineer of the building, caught up a large piece of felt cloth, which lay near and ran to the scene of the explosion. Realizing what might ensue if the blaze was allowed to gain the least headway in the direction of the paint room, which is located under the pavement on the G street side, and where several gallons of highly explosive oils were stored, Jessop, regardless of severe burns which the angry flances indicted on his hands and arms, gradually beat the blaze down.

By the time the Fire Department arrived nothing remained except a few smoldering flames. in the fire-alarm, while John Jessop, Occupants Alarmed.

At this point the officeholders, who had known nothing of the accident, got the odor of burning wood, and—when those on the top floor on the side facting Thirteenth street saw clouds of smoke coming up through the elevator shafts and pouring into their rooms they dashed out into the hallways and made for the elevators. Though they were badly frightened, it was found that none was hurt when a hurried roll call was made of the excited groups which stood in the lower hall and on the given the fire bells rushed to the windows and peered into the street.

A curlous phase of the blaze was the turn the flames took after igniling the celluloid collar which was fastened on the shirt of Jesse Jenkins, a painter, Jenkins' shirt with collar and the galaxy risk of the man to find, after the excitement had calmed down, that although the collar and the had been burnt to a crisp, the shirt had been piled near Jenkins' shirt, found that nothing had been founded by the flames. Not two feet away from where his clothes alway a table with an excelsior covering had been ruined.

I have been in Omaha when the people were ready to lay violent hands on their alderman because the pavements were badly out of repair, and I have been in Chicago, when the Republican press and the citizens generally were justly censuring the Democratic administration for neglecting the streets, but in none for neglecting the streets, but in none of these cities have I ever seen such a patchwork of atrociously kept pave-ments and streets as in Washington.

Far Ahead of Washington.

"Washington, so far as her busines section is concerned, and I have not studied her residential section, is discounted by most of our larger and very many of our smaller communities, far as being well kept is concerned. The impress of Mayor Pingree's "efficiency in Detroit has clearly placed that city far in advance of Washington in the matter of cleanliness and tidiness, and Colonel Waring has done for New York such a service that cleanliness and tidiness in her streets is demanded and provided under such adverse conditions are mad by a other city in the countries. impress of Mayor Pingree's "efficiency provided under such adverse conditions as are met by no other city in the coun-

"Washington impresses me as a city with the greatest possibilities, and the worst results of any city I have ever visited. I can think of no community that would have permitted its streets and walks to get into-much less remain in-condition in which I find those of Washington. I had occasion to visit the Pennsylvania depot, last night, and the brisk rain that had fallen continuously most of the day served to emphasize the dilapidation of most of the pavements and walks in that neighborhood. It would appear from these conditions that the municipal government of Washington has not yet come to realize that asphalt pavements are not expected to last forever, and that the reasonable expectancy of most of these pavements has long since expired and the repaving now under way on Pennsylvania avenue has been far too long delayed. stand walks to get into—much less remain in—condition in which I find those of Washington. In some of the most prominent spots in the Capital City the walks are a patchwork of concrete, brick, asphalt, lile and stone, Around a small inside park in the most conspicuous part of town—I mean the one in Pennsylvania avenue, in front of the Munsey Building—are sidewalks of concrete, brick, asphalt, and dirt. Boy in Serious Condition and Operation Is Necessary.

Mother of Victim Dreamed That Something Had Befallen Child.

With a deep stab in his chest, which he received at the hand of a nineteen-year-old negro, Theodore Hess, a foureen-year-old white boy, lies in the Casualty Hospital in a serious condition today. Although it will probably be necessary to perform an operation this afternoon, the doctors say he has a fair chance of recovery.

Louis Hill, the negro, who is charged with stabbing the lad, is locked up at the Sixth precinct police station. He will be given a hearing in the Police Court tomorrow and committed to jail until Theodore is well enough to ap-ear against him. With four companions, Nick Thomp son, thirteen years, of 531 Fifteenth street northeast; Tony Frederick, fourteen, of 527 Fourteenth street northeast David Burrier, fifteen, of 437 Tennessee avenue northeast, and John McGraw, twelve, of 626 Fifteenth street north-east, Theodore attended a performance at a Ninth street theater last night.

Jostled by Negroes.

According to the stories told by the white boys, they were jostled by Hill and a negro named Gibson, who, the boys say, began "bullying" them as soon as they got on an H street car to go home. The negroes got off at second street, and also shoved the white boys off.

An altercation followed and Hill took a knife from his pocket and stabbed young Hess in the chest. He then turned on Thompson and cut him on the arm, but the wound was not of a serious nature. Both boys were taken to the Casualty Hospital.

He had frequently asked to go before, but this was the first time that I had ever allowed him to be away from home late at night unless with some-member of the family.

Her Dream Came True.

"When I retired last night I had a feeling that I should not have let him go. After being asleep about half an hour, I woke up and found that I was trembling and was very nervous. When June I got myself together, I realized that I had been dreaming that something awful had happened to my boy.

"I am very sorry that Mr. MacVicar did not ask to see me when he called at the District building yesterday," said Commissioner Macfarland, when told of Mr. MacVicar's criticisms. "I was there, as usual, until late in the afternoon, and would have been glad to give him information which he does not seem to have had. In a brief statement, such as you desire today, I can only say that Mr. MacVicar stands alone, so far as I know, among intelligent visitors to Washington, in his-opinion of the city. Everybody else who comes here seems to admire it. We who live here realize its defects, and are working to remove them. But whatever its defects, we can certainly challenge comparison with any other city, even in the matter of asphalt pavements and street sidewalks.

"The Engineering Department is willing to admit that the condition of ome of the roadway pavements of Washington is a great deal worse than it should be, but it is believed the people know that the reason for this is that Congress has not seen fit to concur in the Commissioners' recommendations for increased appropriations for repairs until last year, which has given us too short a time to catch up."

Mr. Fish says: "It appears from the annual report of the Illinois Central Company for the year ended June 30, 1907, that there was an extraordinary increase in the net re-cepts of the corporation during the last four months, which increase is wholly nexplicable and obviously inconsistent with the facts upon any proper account ng, and clearly made for the purpos of producing a favorable but fictitiou

"The first third of the year showed n increase in net receipts of $665,070; and in the next third of the year the net receipts decreased by $572,786.

"Finally, in the last four months, they were suddenly increased by $1,253,889, of which increase $604,751 is reported as made in the single month of June. This phasized by the fact that, although neither the mileage nor the operations had changed in the slightest degree, the succeeding month of July showed a falling off of $55,098 in net revenue, as against the reported gain of $604,751 in June".

The first floor is devoted exclusively to suits, furs, and costumes, and the tables set at regular intervals upon each of which stands a figure in one of the handsome suits, affords a constant delight to the visitors.

It is on the second floor, however, that the women were to be found in the greatest crowds, for it is there that the imported and domestic hats and all the trimmings that go to make them are displayed. There the latest effects in leaddress are shown and handsome and pleasing creations are seen at every leaddress are shown and handsome and pleasing creations are seen at every turn. The large hat seems to be all the go, the latest trimmings for them being bright colored morning giories, and fringed taffeta with uncurled ostrich. A novelty in hats that its being displayed is the Japanese hand embroidered crown. This is for the ultrafashionable. The prevailing colors for hats are dark greens, blues, and dark maroons, with plum and brown being a close second, and a great variety of these are being displayed at this store. On the third floor is situated the muslin and infants' department, and the popularity of this floor was evidenced by the fact that it was crowded with eager shoppers all day.
